Try Communicating at Breakfast

As one who has flunked more Ladies' Home Journal marriage quizzes than perhaps all of the Gabor sisters combined, I have concluded that a major factor is that my husband and I do not "communicate." We do not "talk things out" as advocated by the magazine marriage counselors.

And, Dear Abby, it isn't my fault. Entirely. I am forever trying to "discuss things in the open" to clear the air. For instance, some mornings ago I greeted him at the breakfast table with a knotty problem on which I felt we should attempt to come to some agreement: "Well, they are still on the yacht," I began.

"Who is?" he replied. "Mia Farrow and Frank Sinatra, for God's sake!" I replied.

"Oh, them," he shrugged, turning to the sport page. He then spent 15 minutes discussing the Giants' chances.

"What do you thing that 49-year-old fool is trying to prove?" I offered next.

"Warren Spahn isn't that old," he retorted. "Give the guy a chance."

"I was referring to Frank Sinatra," I replied. "Incidentally, they've placed Allison in a coma . . ."

"JUNE Allyson is in a coma?" he asked excitedly, only because she happens to be one of his favorites.

"No, Allison in 'Peyton Place,' the part Mia Farrow plays. If she marries Frankie, the TV producers are going to have her die because Frank doesn't like his wives to work."

I detected that he was showing about as much interest as the time I attempted to patch up the Sanda Deeb-Bobby Darin marriage, but I tried again:

"Do you know what I can't figure out?"

"What can't you figure out?" he replied.

"What in the world are Claudette Colbert, Rosalind Russell and Merle Oberon doing on the yacht? Why didn't Frankie invite chums closer to Mia's age — Annette Funicello, Hayley Mills, or the youngest Lennon sister?"

"Hmmm," my husband commented. "Looks like Willie Mays is on another hitting streak."

I gave up. How can I "communicate" with a man who doesn't share my concern over Sopria Loren and Carlo Ponti's bigamy problems?

I made one last desperate attempt to gain his attention and "save our marriage" by making up a fantastic tale.

"Good Lord, did you read that Nina Khrushchev is reported to be the 'other woman' in the Liz Taylor - Dick Burton triangle?"

"I see where Marichal is pitching tonight," he replied.

Nurses to Get Facts On Cancer

A series of cancer education programs for all nurses in Los Angeles County has been announced by yeon F. Crum, M.D., chairman of the Professional Education Committee of the American Cancer Society.

The District Nurses Associations in the county have accepted joint sponsorship with the cancer society for the education project.

Utilizing the case-study approach, a two-hour session will be offered each week for six weeks in five locations in the county. Each program will be repeated twice on the scheduled date to give all nursing shifts an opportunity to attend.

The program in the Long Beach-Harbor area will begin Oct. 4. Mrs. Valerie Noel, RN, and Mrs. Maureen Skiba, RN, are in charge of the programs in the local area. Further information is available by writing the Nursing Education Committee of the American Cancer Society, 155 W. 8th St., Los Angeles.
