Those Late, Late Home Movies

Now I know how Fay Wray, King Kong, and some of the film stars of yesteryear must feel when they see themselves in their old movies on television — either depressed or embarrassed.

For some of our old home movies — those early classics, produced and directed by my husband and in which I play many a starring role — were re-released the other night, only because one of my kids found them in a bottom of a drawer where they were well-hidden.

My main objection to the films being shown was that they have a way of dating you, like framing your high school diploma and hanging it in the front hall. My kids, for one, do a good enough job of making me feel ancient without my being photographed in a Betty Grable hairdo.

Brian, at least, tried to console me during the screening by commenting that I didn't look a day over 29. Which would have been comforting to hear, except that I was 25 at the time. Nor did it help my image to be seen cavorting before the camera in dresses down to my ankles. Which happened to be the "New Look" in 1951 — if you can remember back that far.

Coincidentally, 1951 was the same year that my husband, Eric von Stroheim, purchased his camera equipment. And like most camera neophytes he shot more footage during the first few weeks than all of the celluloid used in "Birth of a Nation."

Like all great directors, my husband is famous for a unique style. DeMille is noted for his bath tub scenes and Alfred Hitchcock is the master of suspense, and my husband shoots people while they are eating. With a camera, that is. Mostly because he hates pictures of relatives and friends waving their arms before the lens, and also because I insist he photograph family functions — birthday parties, re-unions, holidays, — in which we all seem to do nothing but eat.

I'm inclined to agree with the kids who maintain that his command must be, "Lights, Action, Camera — and Alka Seltzer."

So all in all it was quite a show. The kids felt that it was better than the Kraft cheese commercials they see on TV. Maybe it's too bad that the camera novelty wore off and he hung up his megaphone — and tam — which forced me into retirement — like Garbo.

'1912 Days' Beauty Pageant Set Oct. 1

A beauty pageant, sponsored by the Hermosa Beach Chamber of Commerce in conjunction with the "1912 Days" celebration Sept. 30 through Oct. 3 is open to contestants living in the area bounded by Imperial Highway on the north, Harbor Freeway on the east, and Pacific Ocean on the south and west.

The contest will be a true beauty pageant, according to Dick Baylor, contest chairman. The winner will be selected for her beauty of figure and face, plus personality.

Contestants' age is limited to a minimum of 16 years

DEFECTIVE HEARTS

Children born with defects of the arm or hand should have their hearts examined with extra attention, according to research reported to the Heart Association. Cardiac defects tend to accompany inborn abnormalities of the upper limbs.

and maximum of 24 years on Oct. 1, and she must be single. Contest attire will include a gown and two-piece swimsuit.

NINE GIRLS who have entered the "Miss 1912 Days" Pageant are Michele Casey, 18, and Jann Geer, 18, Redondo Beach; Shannon Powell and Shirley Fox, 18, Torrance; Linda Volkmer, 17, Gardena; Delphina Arce, 17, Manhattan Beach; Priscilla Hope, 17, Hermosa Beach; and Yolanda Encino, 19, and Patty McDonald, 17, Hawthorne.

The pageant will be judged by five well-known personalities. A professional master of ceremonies will conduct the program.

There is no charge to enter the contest. Also, contestants will not be required to sell tickets to win the contest.

Entry blanks may be obtained at the Hermosa Beach Chamber of Commerce, 200 Pier Ave., Hermosa Beach. Further information also may be obtained by calling the Chamber of Commerce office at FR 2-6519.
