Restaurants Catering to Eat-and-Run Philosophy

By REYNOLDS KNIGHT

Eat and run may be today's slogan for Americans who dine out. It's possible that leisurely dining isn't as popular as it used to be.

In a large survey made across the country, 70 per cent of the restaurants, including cafeterias and drug stores, were found to have quick-service facilities. Only 22 per cent of all the eating places were strictly "white cloth" establishments, that is, ones that did not have any counter or cafeteria service. The remainder were hotel or motel restaurants that also had quick-service facilities.

Restaurants in general are making increased use of prepared mixes and foods ready for the table. On reason is that chefs are in very short supply — one restaurant school had several thousand more jobs available than it had graduates.

AUTO TOPS COVERED — Convertible automobiles are becoming increasingly popular—and insurance claims for damage to them are becoming increasingly steep.

A unique program designed to save insurance companies up to 60 per cent in the payment of some parts of auto damage claims while guaranteeing the car owner "expert repair and original equipment quality products" has been introduced in the eastern part of the nation by Ravco Manufacturing Co.

Joseph Garfinkel, general manager of Ravco, a subsidiary of B. F. Goodrich Tire Co., said the plan was developed and refined in an 18-month pilot operation in Greater Boston, where many insurance firms have indicated acceptance. It now has been extended to the New York metropolitan area.

"Under the program Ravco repairs and restores convertible tops and interior trim covered on comprehensive insurance agreements," he said. "It extends a wholesale price to the insurance company and, at the same time, provides a retail guarantee — up to five years for tops—to the assured."

BITS O' BUSINESS — Three New England utilities have asked governmental authority to merge into a new holding company called Northeast Utilities. . . Two huge amusement parks are in the planning stages—one outside Los Angeles with a Wild West theme, the other outside Atlanta, with a Southeastern theme. . . Beer-can struggle seems in the offing, with aluminum makers and steel makers battling it out. . . Total retail sales through August ran an average of 6.5 per cent ahead of the 1964 monthly average . . . New group hopes to build dirigibles that can carry up to 100 tons of air freight, including giant prefabricated steel assemblies. . . Truck sales this year should beat 1964's figure of nearly 1.4 million vehicles, setting a new high record for the fourth straight year.

COMPUTER AID — The opinion voiced by some economists that computers give big business a decided advantage over small business is not true, according to the head of one of the nation's largest computer manufacturers.

Walter W. Finke, president of Honeywell's electronic data processing division, testified recently before a U.S. Senate subcommittee that "growing numbers of small businesses are making use of growing numbers of computer products to improve their efficiency and effectiveness." He said further, "The computer can no more put a company out of business than it can keep one in business. Its value lies with the skill of the user. Computers can help all business managers to become more skillful."

LOT APPROVED

P.V. Towers of 21711½ S. Western Ave. has received approval of plans for an 18-acre, one-lot subdivision on the Palos Verdes Peninsula. The property is located east of Crenshaw Boulevard and north of Palos Verdes Drive North.

The Honeywell executive noted the increasing availability of relatively low-priced yet high-performance computers, as well as service bureau and time-sharing systems. He concluded that "the relative computing power available to small business is equal to or greater than that available to large business. By using computers wisely, small business will continue to be a major competitive force in our free enterprise system."

* * *

THINGS TO COME—Semi-flexible plastic nozzle for vacuum cleaners can be bent around corners to reach small areas and crevices of laboratory equipment . . . Convex plastic mirrors that are virtually unbreakable. They're made in diameters of one to four feet, and particularly useful for watching production lines, keeping tabs on merchandise, and reducing supervision costs . . . Water faucet handles that are color-coded, red for hot and blue for cold (also marked "H" and "C") as added safety feature for small children and people with poor vision . . . Marker with fluorescent ink in it may be used to identify articles in dark areas, such as closets, attics and warehouses . . . Slip-resistant bath mats with hundreds of small suction cups on one side.

* * *

SCIENCE NEWS — Materials for highways are being tested by means of an artificial "truck"—a machine that can drop seven-ton loads repeatedly on road bases . . . Scientists now theorize that large areas of Norway were flooded by the sea about 10,000 years ago because salt water has been found in the bottom layers of two lakes several miles from the coast. . . . Over a 19-year test period, the leukemia death rate in one of our western states appeared to be about two and one-half times higher for urban children than those living in rural areas . . . New copper-removing process may make it worthwhile to reclaim steel from some junk, such as old cars and major home appliances, where it's been more trouble than it's worth.
