Massive Pipe Relocation Project Begins at Center

facilities to serve it — created a dditional engineer sing problems.

"We did extensive field work to make sure the new lines would not conflict with other underground facilities — sewerage, drainage or water lines now in place or called for in the future," Scott explained.

"At the same time, the new lines are being installed in a special strip of land so they will not conflict with surface construction of building s, streets, and railroad lines," he said.

The pipeline relocation project is expected to be completed by the end of the year, according to Brewster B. Broadwell of William J. Moran Co., which is supervising development and marketing of the Watson Center.
