However, do bear in mind that some wrinkles are signs of character, be they admirable or not. A face utterly devold of expression lines is an empty face, to be avoided at any costs. On the other hand, many unwanted wrinkles are caused by muscular collapse. There are 55 muscles in the face, and unfortunately too many American women develop only those around the mouth.

Tired muscles sag because they die on the fiber so to speak. Lack of exercise cuts down the circulation of blood, and the muscles sag, causing the skin that was stretched over them to collapse along with them and thus wrinkle. If wrinkles are an annoyance to you, the first thing you must do is make horrible faces at yourself. Sit in front of your mirror and try to move every part of your face.

Raise you eyebrows, twitch your nose, stretch your nose, extretch your neck, even wiggle your ears if you can. With fingertips moving rapidly as though you were a speed typist, pat lightly all over your face.

So-called beauty autinorities differ about the use of heat on the face. One expert recommends the steam facial bath, whereas another claims that the use of hot water, hot towel packs or steam on the face causes wrinkles. They never bother, as I do, to tell you that steam is ideal, and in fact almost a necessity, for cleansing the pores of any skin, because the steam expands the pores.

A dry skin is more susceptible to wrinkling than one kept moist. For contrast note the skin of women living in closer living in colder climates, Creams are good for dry or oily skin. It's how they are used that is most important.

Dry skin should be creamed and then creamed some more. Far too many of you spend good money on facial creams, then presume (as in that commercial slogan) that a little dab will do you. Not so. Lavish it on the skin and rub it in. Better to use too much than not enough.
