U.S. Diplomacy Handed Setback

Herewith is another chapter in that hitherto unpublished textbook: "World History, 1350-1999.

By the last half of the 20th Century, American diplomacy had made remarkable strides since the first crude days of the Republic when President Jefferson, wishing to negotiate with a foreign head of state, simply took pen in hand and wrote him a letter.

For example, in April of 1965 President Johnson decided the time was ripe to offer "unconditional ne-

On publication of the letter a week later in the Eagle, a subscriber mentioned it on a postcard to a cousin in Canton who was interviewed that day on a peasant-in-the-street broadcast over Radio Peking monitored in Yokohama by a bi-lingual ham operator whose headlines spotted by an alert American consulate employe while unwrapping fish.

trous the area, female-wise, Take Valencia Valley, which is slightly north of Los Angeles, this country's biggest disaster of all.

From my personal observa-tions and study on the spot, the grooming of Valencia women actually would be most fitting as one of the more gruesome chapters in "The Fall of the House of Usher."

However, after a period of recuperation, seasoned with flagous of good Rhine wines, I have steeled myself to tell-ing the true story of Valencia womanhood, as I, the infal-lible Count Marco, have wit-nessed it first hand.

Remember, everything I report must be related to the age-old truth that the role of a woman (ever since Eve) is destiny of hers she must love her man, care for him, excite him and soothe him. In Valen-cia Valley, that little castoff of Los Angeles, this ecstatic role of womanhood falls short of achievement—by about 5 million light years.
