

ADELINE DALEY

Are You Going to Dance, Mom?

Who invents all those cheery platitudes you keep hearing about love and marriage? Such as, "Two can live as cheaply as one." Not when both parties like to eat, unfortunately.

The cliché which puzzles me most, however, is the one which declares flatly, "Children keep you young."

I've never figured out exactly how, other than that they provide you with a daily workout about as strenuous as if you were training for count of the San Francisco Olympics. The one thing I AM certain of, however, as momentary relief when Diane exasperately exclaimed,

"How would Mom know? She was probably still a little girl back in Minnesota!"

This has taught me never to relate far-fetched tales from my "past" which place me in World War I, singing "Good-by Broadway, Hello France," and expect a disbelieving laugh from my kids. The pity of it all is that they accept everything.

Although our older kids know our correct ages (give-or-mostly take—a few years), I think they succeed in making me feel even more ancient by their habitual embarrassment over every move we make. All I need do, for instance, is mention that we're attending a club dance, and they will ask hopefully, "But you're not going to dance are you—at your age?"

If they had their way, our kids would like my husband and me to resemble the old farm couple in the famous Grant Wood painting, "American Gothic."

I receive no moral support from my husband either. How can I hop off—or I should say, feel young at heart—when he is continually allowing age-revealing remarks to creep into his conversation, such as "There'll never be another Ruby Keeler," "Lambeth Walk, anyone?"

New Lynns Store Will Open Here

Grand opening festivities for the newest store in the Lynns junior department store chain will be held Saturday in downtown Torrance. The new store will be located at 1269 Sartori Ave.

Lynns operates stores in Long Beach and Huntington Park, as well as at 8304 S. Vermont Ave., and 824 S. Broadway in Los Angeles.

The self-service stores offer a wide selection of ladies' sportswear, toppers, rainwear, lingerie, housecoats, accessories, girls' dresses, and men's and boys' wear. Top values are offered at the lowest possible price because of Lynns policy of quantity

Space Lab Plans New Facilities

A $27-million laboratory and office building, the eighth in a series of major structures at the $30 million Thompson Ramo Woolridge Space Technology Laboratories research and manufacturing complex in Redondo Beach, is presently being planned by Albert C. Martin and Associates.

The Los Angeles architectural and engineering firm has planned, designed and engineered all buildings at the 107-acre TRW Space Park in Redondo Beach. This latest structure will be a two-story, 133,000-square foot facility.

Groundbreaking for the new building is scheduled for early May.

R. A. BURGIN, TRW official in charge of its building program, said, "This new, privately-financed building is in keeping with our philosophy of having all the necessary facilities in support of advanced technology located in a single, integrated complex. This addition, and others now in planning stages, reflect the growth of TRW Space Technology Laboratories."

THW Space Technology Laboratories is a leading manufacturer of spacecraft systems and subsystems with research, development and manufacturing facilities in Redondo Beach. It has prime contractor responsibility for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's (NASA) Orbiting Geophysical Observatory (OGO) and Interplanetary Pioneer spacecraft and the Air Force's Nuclear Detection Satellite Program. For more than 10 years, the company has also been responsible for the Systems Engineering and Technical Direction of the Thor, Atlas, Titan and Minuteman Ballistic Missile Programs for the U. S. Air Force.

THE CONCRETE steel, aluminum, and glass structure will be compatible with other engineering and laboratory buildings at Space Park.
