

INTEGRATED FREEWAY TRAFFIC . . . Under the proposal put forth by Torrance Councilman David K. Lyman, the proposed Pacific Coast Freeway would be used to provide transit lanes for much of its way

Councilman Urging New Area Transit Loop

A new concept in rapid transit, which would link downtown Los Angeles with a major segment of the Harbor-South Bay area, has been unveiled by Torrance city councilman, David K. Lyman.

Significantly, Lyman said, the project would cost "substantially less" than rapid transit proposals currently under consideration.

Running from Los Angeles' civic center, the combined surface-subway train system would hook up a dozen important sites as far south as Long Beach.

With modernistic cars speeding along its routes, the system would provide in-minutes access to the Coliseum and Sports Arena, Hollywood Park, Los Angeles International Airport, the cities of Hawthorne and Lawndale, De Amo and South Bay Shopping Centers, Lomita, Harbor City, Wilmington, the Long Beach civic center and return to the Los Angeles civic center.

A SEPARATE but integral route would connect the system with San Pedro and the harbor area, Lyman said.

Under Lyman's proposal, the state would allocate engineering funds to study a system which could be installed utilizing freeway construction already planned. State Highway right of way and abandoned or non used Pacific Electric right of way now in existence.

One area utilizing integrated freeway and rail construction would be along a stretch of the proposed Pacific Coast Highway which will be built through sections of Torrance, Lomita, Harbor City, Wilmington and Long Beach. Parking lots and bus feeder lines would provide local access to the pickup and departure terminals, Lyman said.

"This is the first time a system providing service to all of South West Los Angeles County on the basis of where people wish to travel has been proposed," said Lyman at a press conference called to explain his proposal.

IN OUTLINING the details of his plan, Lyman said it "should have come months ago" from the Southern California Rapid Transit District, which he described as "primarily oriented" to the West Los Angeles and Pomona areas.

Whereas the SCRTD proposed a rapid transit system running along Wilshire Boulevard through Los Angeles to Pomona, such a system would provide little, if any, benefit to the residents of other outlying sections of Los Angeles County.

"I feel attention should be given to an overall, comprehensive transit proposal for the entire county rather than an isolated single area."

Lyman's system utilizes the so-called "circle concept," in which a series of transit routes in a circular pattern could extend as a cloverleaf to many sections of the county, with all of the routes meeting at a central location in the Civic Center of Los Angeles.

TO EFFECT his proposal, Lyman called for these changes:

1. Amend the SCRTD Act so that the state has the power to plan, construct and decide routes. This power should be given to a state agency so that when transit lines are planned, they could be coordinated with the planning of major freeways and highways.

2. The SCRTD board should keep the right to manage and operate the transit system. This would include the duty of deciding and establishing bus lines in conjunction with the overall system.

3. A formal study be initiated into the feasibility of establishing the system proposed by Lyman.

4. Pending installation of that system, immediate steps be taken to increase the quantity and quality of the bus service to the sections of Los Angeles County that are in need of it.

"The SCRTD has been a dismal failure because it has not addressed itself to the problem of creating a comprehensive transit system, but rather has persisted with its preconceived notion of a Wilshire Boulevard line supported by the whole of Los Angeles County," Lyman said.

COUNT MARCO

You're Missing in His Dreams

Most American husbands hold a secret wish, but you're not included in it, my dears. According to the way I interpret the words of Dr. Hyman Spotnitz, psychiatrist and neurologist, your best dreams of himself as the greatest lover in the world. In fact, according to the good doctor, more and more husbands are trying to turn that secret wish into reality.

This is probably why conventions have become so popular and more wives are following their husbands on these prolonged sessions.

Many beasts make their moves in the first year of marriage, and they pick up steam during the fifth year, branching out in the unlucky seventh, then go whole hog during the dangerous 20s.

After that he just buys an extra pair of pairs of slippers and parks them permanently under other beds. Do you know where his restlessness starts? Right in your living room. It's called television. Every few minutes someone is trying to sell a product, and the hard sell used is sex. A man, for example, lights a cigarette for a beautiful woman. Obviously the intent is that once he's lit her cigarette she'll be ready to light up other things.

A woman applies hand cream. She's magnificent—so groomed, so svelte, so wanting. The man enters the picture, takes her hand and nibbles it, cream and all, right up to the elbow. Your husband writhes. He sees himself as that man.

Then there is that ravishing creature shampooing her hair, with a final close-up of the beast nuzzling, sniffing and being promised much more before the night is over.

All these and many more. Just observe. And while you're looking, don't think he isn't looking you over and figuring out how he can go fishing next weekend or maybe to that convention.

So threatening has TV become that in Sweden the housewives have asked the government to make a study of television in family life and the rise in divorce.

You can do one of two things: Either face up to his philandering as a natural instinct of the male animal, or do something with yourself so that no matter how many commercials show up on that tube you won't show up second best.

You, too, can be as lovely, delightful and desirable as the star of the late, late movie. You'd better be, for the sake of your marriage.

Proposition A is designed to provide $12.3 million to construct a 438-bed hospital for the Watts-Willowbrook area. Hahn is honorary chairman of the Citizens' Committee for Proposition A.

Among those who have already agreed to serve on the Mexican-American Committee are Dr. R. J. Carreon, Mexican-American Affairs Coordinator for Los Angeles, Alex Banuelos, highway safety commissioner for Los Angeles County; Mrs. Lucy Baca, member of the Regional Planning Commission and former president of the 10th District PTA, and Joe G. Castillo, a member of the Human Relations Commission.

"There is no doubt in my mind about the great need for this hospital," said Castillo. "And everyone in the community needs to be concerned over health problems in every other part of the community. I am happy to endorse Proposition A and serve on this committee."

Ann Landers Says

Timid Soul Loses $2 to a Milkman

Dear Ann Landers: How does a person develop courage? I'm 35 years old and still searching for the answer. What baffles me is that I chicken out on the silliest things.

For example: Last week the milkman overcharged me $2 and I spent an hour rehearsing what I was going to say to him. Finally I decided to skip it. Another time, during a committee meeting, a woman told a vicious lie about a good friend of mine. I knew it was a lie and I was boiling inside but I couldn't bring myself to speak up.

A few years ago I ran into a burning house and dragged out a relative without a minute's thought of my own safety. People said I was a hero—that I had performed an act of tremendous courage. But is it courage when you don't stop to think about what you are doing? If I'm so brave why am I such a coward about the little things? What can I do about it? —TIMID LUMP.

Dear Lump: Very few heroes stop to think about the danger. The experts tell us that most acts of heroism are the result of the individual's conditioning and/or training.

Chickening out with the milkman was not due to a lack of courage. The reason can be found in your feelings of insecurity.

Verbalize your feelings with a friend. It will give you strength to face the next test and to act on your convictions. Each time you succeed it will make the next time easier.

Dear Ann Landers: This morning I telephoned my son's steady girl friend to see if she had heard anything from him. Henry is stationed at Fort Dix.

The girl's mother said, "Oh, Diane went down there two weeks ago to be with Henry. She has taken an apartment for a month."

Ann, I was so dumbfounded, I had to get a chair and sit down by the phone before I could do my housework.

Diane is 17 years old. She finished high school last semester. Her parents are respectable people, but they must be crazy to allow her to go to an Army camp and spend a month with a boy.

We brought Henry up to know right from wrong. But how can a young man resist temptation when a girl throws herself at him? Steel he isn't made of. Now I know why we haven't heard from Henry for two weeks. He is so busy with the girl he can't find a minute to pick up a pencil and write to his mother.

Please tell parents to keep their daughters at home. Mothers with boys in the service have enough to worry about without THIS problem. —DISGUSTED.

Dear Disgusted: I agree. It is disgraceful for parents to allow a 17-year-old girl to be a camp follower—and when they write and ask if it's all right to let their daughters go visit boy friends in Army camps I tell them as strongly as I can, NO!!! It is not all right. More than this I can't do.

Confidential to Exhausted And Sick at Heart: I am not surprised. Nobody can face today's challenges if he is still carrying yesterday's burdens and suffering from last year's heartaches. Stop beating yourself. You did what you felt was best and in my opinion you did better than most people could have done under the circumstances.
