'Mortals, Immortals' Next Topic

"Mortals and Immortals" will be the subject at Christian Science church services today.

Golden Text: "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly" (1 Corinthians).

Included in the lesson-sermon will be Jesus' statement to Nicodemus. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again."

And from the Christian Science textbook: "We must reverse our feeble flutterings—our efforts to find life and truth in matter—and rise above the testimony of the material senses, above the mortal to the immortal idea of God . . . It is only by acknowledging the supremacy of Spirit, which annuls the claims of matter, that mortals can lay off mortality and find the indissoluble spiritual link which establishes man forever in the divine likeness, inseparable from his creator" ("Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy).

HE EXPLAINED the tremendous resource and capability for disaster feeding constituted in the membership of the FSEA, and of the association's close affiliation with Red Cross as a unit of the Disaster Services food committee.

On a daily basis, the 500 FSEA members in Los Angeles, representing hotels, restaurants, and industries where cafeteria feeding of plant employees is necessary, are responsible for menu planning, food procurement and feeding of approximately 750,000 people.

In planning as Red Cross volunteers for food service in time of a major disaster, FSEA has developed survival menus of canned and processed foods which are readily available and have menus which would lend themselves to feeding in a war caused disaster.

PLANS ARE also ready for the feeding of persons who might be isolated to the extent that food would have to be airdropped.

"In our cooperative agreement with the American Red Cross, we have pledged our service in time of major disaster, making available our talents in both procurement and food preparation and making it unnecessary for the Red Cross to stockpile large quantities of food supplies or to train the many thousands of food service people who might be necessary in feeding the maximum number of people who might be affected by a disaster in this area," Katz said.

Emphasizing that FSEA is just one unit of the disaster food committee of the Los Angeles Red Cross Chapter, Katz said the capability of the entire committee is so extensive that "we feel we could feed on a continuing basis, the maximum number of people who might require feeding in a major disaster."

HE ALSO said, "It is generally conceded that there is a food inventory, warehoused and on hand in the greater Los Angeles area to provide for the entire population of the Los Angeles Basin Area for approximately four days."

The plans of the committee also take into consideration the possibility of local food stocks being exhausted, Katz said the Red Cross committee has an agreement with the National Defense Transportation Association (representing all of the transportation industry) for bringing into this area food supplies from throughout the country.

"This group would be responsible for the logistical support of those of us who would be involved in the actual feeding operation."

In addition to its interest in community service through Red Cross, Katz said the FSEA also has a project of interesting young men and women in the food service industry.

Disaster Food Program Explained by Red Cross

An unique segment of the Red Cross volunteer force was featured when a "disaster dinner" under the auspices of the Food Service Executives Association's Los Angeles Branch, was prepared and served at the joint board meeting of the five branches of the Los Angeles Red Cross Chapter's Southern District.

Turkey, gravy, whipped potatoes, green beans, hot rolls, and fruit was prepared and served to more than 100 Red Cross leaders representing Gardena, Harbor City, Lomita, Palos Verdes, San Pedro, Torrance, and Wilmington, as an illustration how, in time of disaster, food service can be provided with minimum effort under adequate professional guidance.

The meeting, planned in an effort to keep the Southern District volunteers aware of disaster preparedness measures, featured a speech by Gunther B. Katz, a three-year board member of Los Angeles' FSEA and a 20-year veteran in the food management industry who currently heads up the food service department for Hughes Aircraft in El Segundo.

Lawlessness Threat to Nation, O'Leary Says

William O'Leary, seeking the Democratic nomination for Congress in the 17th District, has called for an end to "the atmosphere of lawlessness being created by political leaders asking their people to break unjust laws."

O'Leary, speaking before the Pensioners Association, said civil disobedience is the "biggest threat to our democracy that there is today."

"The Watts riots and the Berkeley incidents are good examples of what happens when people take the law into their own hands," O'Leary said. He said the riots were brought on in part by the people being told it was all right to break unjust laws.

"One group decides a law is an unjust law and breaks it to bring pressure to change it," O'Leary explained. "This lays the ground work for other groups to decide they disagree with other laws and break them. Criminal elements can utilize this type of thinking to rob and loot."

He said picketing to bring attention to an unjust law is "all right as long as it does not violate any laws."

"Political leaders should have the courage to speak out for law and order and change the atmosphere to one that develops respect for the laws of our land," he concluded.

O'Leary is seeking to unseat veteran Democratic Congressman Cecil King in the June 7 primary.

Classroom Teachers Get Help From Machines

"Machines can never replace teachers; but they are a tremendous aid to the business education teacher," So said Mrs. Virginia Brunell, West High School business education department chairman, at Monday's Education Council of Torrance meeting.

A program on "Business Education Today" highlighted the luncheon event at the Torrance Recreation Center.

Referring to the steno lab, a machine with which a teacher can individualize each student's dictation, Mrs. Brunell pointed out that West High School is piloting use of the equipment in Torrance as part of a vocational education program in which the state shares costs.

USE OF THE machine begins, she pointed out, after a student has had sufficient theory to begin taking dictation. Dictation at varying rates of speed is sent over the machine's four channels simultaneously as 32 students listen over earphones, she said.

"Each girl receives her dictation at the speed she is ready for while her neighbors are getting dictation at their own speeds at the same time," she stated.

Through her master control, the teacher sets the control for each individual channel and is able to interrupt a channel if she needs to make a special point to the students on that particular channel, the teacher explained.

"BY MEANS of a fifth channel," she pointed out, "the teacher can dictate on a one-to-one basis where necessary. Where a girl needs additional support, this helps."

Result of the steno lab, Mrs. Brunell said, was that the girls "walk out of the school employable."

"This semester," she concluded, "12 of 15 graduating seniors who have taken this training at West High have already lined up jobs."

Assisting her in demonstrating steno lab equipment were June Reseche and Linda Watt, advanced shorthand students, and Judy Duncan, Susan Jordan, and Rita Scott, beginning shorthand students.
