City's Schools Bursting At the Seams, Hull Says

"A community can't grow from a sleepy suburb of 20 thousand to the third largest city in a county the size of Los Angeles without bursting the seams of its schools," said Dr. J. H. Hull, superintendent of the Torrance Unified School District.

and formed its own district in 1947, the schools had less than 2,000 students, the superintendent said. "Today, not even 20 years later, the city is seven times as big as it was and the schools have 17 times as many students."

ACCORDING to city manager Edward Ferraro, only four cities in the entire United States exceeded Torrance in percentage of population growth during the 1950-60 decade.

This year Torrance passed Glendale, populationwise, to become officially the third largest city in Los Angeles County with a population of 137,573 as of Jan. 1. "Each month the population increases 1,000, which means that we have already passed the 140,000 mark," Dr. Hull stated.

In the past year, city growth has resulted in an increase of 43,647 light meter installations, 524 new water meters, and an additional 931 gas meters.

EFFECT OF THIS growth, the superintendent said, is that the Torrance schools have run out of room.

"We have more students than we can house this fall," he stated. "Much as we dislike the thought, it looks like we are going to have to conduct double sessions for the first time in five years. We have used up all the money we had available for building schools. The only way we can solve our crisis is if the voters approve more school construction bonds in the June 7 election. Proposition FF on the ballot would provide $9 million for building classrooms. If the voters give us the two-thirds majority we need and approve school bonds, schools will be able to keep pace with city growth."
