El Camino Art Instructor Calls It a Career—Again

Joe Gadden, El Camino College art instructor, will retire this June after 10 years of extraordinary service to the college, it was announced this week by college officials.

Gadden has the distinction of being twice retired. He came to El Camino College as a student following retirement from the U. S. Immigration Service; he had been with the government for 22 years.

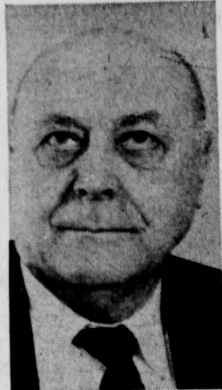

"A gentleman farmer is one who has to read all of the government news bulletins."

Upon completion of his course work at El Camino, he continued his studies and earned a master of arts degree from the University of Southern California.

He returned to El Camino as a full-time art instructor in 1955. The beginning of a second career has been described by Gadden as "a chance to live life twice."

Speaking for colleagues within the art department, Miss Mildred Walker observed, "No one can make an accurate accounting of the value given by a good person to his fellow beings. It is enough to know that hosts of people will be forever grateful that Mr. Gadden decided to devote his second career to El Camino and that, whatever his third career may be, the goodness will be there, too."
