A parcel of Flood Control District land near Carson has been declared excess and a quitclaim deed has been issued, Supervisor Kenneth Hahn said today.

(Continued from Page 1) toward the Raymond home. The first suspect asked the second suspect what had become of the package and she said that she hadn't opened it yet. She said she wanted to take it first to her employer, an attorney, for advice.

When the second suspect returned shortly from her "attorney's office," Mrs. Raymond told police, she claimed to the other two women that the package contained $12,000.

The "attorney" allegedly said that the owner must be a crook because there was no identification on the package and that it would do no good to turn the money over to the police because the police "would just keep it, anyway."

They DECIDED to split the cash four ways. The second suspect told Mrs. Raymond, however, that in order to get her share, she would have to deliver some "collateral" to the attorney to prove she was honest and sincere about the deal.

Mrs. Raymond then gave the woman a check made out to cash for $1,100, jewelry worth $1,000, and $245 in currency. The women left saying they would be back with the collateral and Mrs. Raymond's cut of the $12,000 at 4 p.m.

When they didn't return, Mrs. Raymond called her bank to find that the check had been cashed. Police said Mrs. Raymond was difficult to interview because of her poor eyesight and emotional state.

Mrs. Raymond said the women were nicely dressed and courteous. They appeared to be about 28 and 40 years of age respectively.

...Let's Go

By LARRY MACARAY

One of the most exciting parts of my recent around-the-world trip was a side tour from Tokyo to Nikko National Park. Nikko is located about 100 kilometers north of Tokyo and is of easy access by train or car from the capital city. It takes less than two hours by electric train and about three hours by car.

In former days it was different. It used to be a four-day trip to the cool mountain area overgrown with cryptomeria trees. Deep in the mountains is Lake Chuzenji, said to be the highest among the major lakes of Japan from which originates the Kegan Fall—the second largest waterfall in Japan—which flows into the River Daiya.

Since olden times, the area has been considered sacred and like most other Japanese sacred grounds, is situated in a mountainous region of outstanding beauty. It is understandable therefore that Nikko has been designated as a national park. The famous Toshogu Shrine was constructed against this natural background as one of the most luxurious and grandiose architectural masterpieces in Japanese history.

NIKKO has been fairly well developed as a tourist spot since olden days, but the majority of those visiting Nikko come primarily for the purpose of viewing the Toshogu Shrine. The word "Nikko" in the famous Japanese saying, "Never say kedo (splendid) until you have seen Nikko" is synonymous with the Toshogu Shrine. In a later article I will tell about the Toshogu Shrine and the unbelievable workmanship that created this shrine.

In olden days, the mountains of Nikko were so severe in natural environment that few people attempted to climb them. The only ones who dared to attempt the mountains were a limited number of priests whose religion made them worship there. It surely must have been a difficult and exhausting task.

Burglars Get $1,900 From Home

Thomas Schaus, 4218 Paseo Tortugas, returned home about 7:30 p.m. Wednesday to discover that his front door had been forced. A burglar or burglars, he told police, had taken several cash boxes containing currency and negotiable U.S. Savings Bonds. The take included $40 silver dollars and $200 worth of quarters. Also missing was a 6-inch revolver.

(Continued from Page 1) for co-workers and for his aid to a family which had to move out of their home when it caught on fire. Mosley took the family to an apartment unit he had just built near his home and the family lived there until their own home was repaired.

AN EXCHANGE student from Guatemala City, Miriam E. Garcia, called Mosley "a good neighbor of one country to another in our world" in her letter nominating him for the coveted award.

After Willis came to Torrance, Mosley and his wife enrolled in a German class at Torrance Evening High School in order to make communications easier. Last summer, Mosley went to Europe as a guest at Willis' wedding.

Yesterday's presentation was made by Mrs. Lucile Forsyth, who was the 1966 "Good Neighbor" winner.
