

Kanine Korner

By Francis X. Lohmann

William Cooper, certainly a famous name in English literature, was a great admirer of the noble dog. His detailed description of the abilities of his beloved dog, Beau, displays the feelings from the depth of this great man's soul.

William Cowper wrote: "I must tell of a feat of my dog, Beau. Walking by the river-side one sunny morning, I noticed some water lilies at a little distance from the bank. They are a large white flower, with an orange colored eye, very beautiful, indeed. I had a desire to gather one, and, having a long cane in my hand, by the help of it endeavored to bring one of them within my reach. But the attempt proved in vain, and so I walked forward. Beau had all the while watched me very closely. Returning soon after towards the same place, I saw him plunge into the river, while I was about 40 yards distant; and when I had nearly reached the spot, he swam to land with the lily in his mouth, which he came and laid at my feet."

WILLIAM THURBER once wrote "If man has benefited immeasurably by his association with the dog, what, you may ask, has the dog gotten out of it. The dog has, of course, been heavily charged with punishments. He has known the muzzle, the leash and the tether; he has suffered the indignation of the show bench, the tin can in the tail, the ribbon in the hair; his love life with the other sex of his species has been regulated by the frigid hand of human authority, his digestion ruined by the macaroons and marshmallows of doting women. The list of his woes could be continued indefinitely. But the dog has also had his fun, for he has been privileged to live with and study at close range, the only creature with reason, the most unreasonable of creatures... the man." How about that...

Never feed your dog sweets such as candy or cake. Instead, keep a supply of Live-A-Snaps on hand at all times. These canine goodies are scientifically tested for Bowser's platelet delight and nutritional needs. Live-A-Snaps are available at most supermarkets and pet shops...

SHOULD YOU need the services of a veterinarian in the event your own personal

BREED OF THE WEEK: AMONG HIS multi-fold

Norwegian Elkhound... It is generally conceded by dog experts that the Norwegian Elkhound is the oldest of domesticated European breeds, and in the opinion of many, one of the most ancient of all breeds on earth today.
