Your letter got through, but you didn't.

You should have called him on the phone. Sure it's long distance. But it only takes a few minutes.

And in those few minutes you get a chance to state a clear case. Plus a second chance, every time you haven't been clear enough. You can perceive and persuade. If necessary, gently gently persist. You can laugh (you've got a great laugh). Maybe even do your Cary Grant imitation.

Then you know what happens? While you're being more than just another letter in the in-box to him, he starts being more than just a title at an address to you.

That's when you start doing business.

Call Long Distance when you really mean business.
