FAPEETE, Tahiti—Tahiti is preparing for the Juilet, the 14th of July celebration that lasts a glorious, wine-soaked month on this French Polynesian island. Guitars thump day and night along the waterfront. And Quinn's, a piece of South Seas out of Somerset Maugham, is jammed with sailors and the Foreign Legion and brown vahines.

There's a steady procession of put-put scooters with cargoes of bare-legged brown girls, long black hair streaming in the wind. The air is like warm silk. The food is French—best in the South Pacific.

Good hotels. Prices are not low, but not killing. (About $15-$18 a day for a double.) Rent cars and rent scooters available. Boy Meets Girl? Indeed they do.

"When we finish college (or maybe we won't) a couple of us would like to spend a few years in Tahiti or some island. We don't require much..."

The French don't make it easy for young beachcombers. You need onward tickets, proof of income. And even then, they have some kind of six months limit. You are not permitted to work.

Have a return ticket. Don't burn all the bridges. I've known several men who tried the Gauguin thing down here and have gone back. Tahiti is small. And gets smaller as you live here. (Not much to do except cut up local gossip.)

One man who left his U.S. wife and children for the free and easy life and took up with an island girl, complained: "If I get home after 6 o'clock, she beats me with a canoe paddle." (Great place to visit. I wouldn't want to live here.)

in the islands and are counting the days until they get out. Even the French long for Paris.

"We are a young couple, no children, with $3,000 saved. Now where could we go on that money for a year?"

You can make it in Mexico. An added advantage is transportation by bus won't chew into your money too much. Around Europe by camper runs $12 a day. (Bus to New York and take the cut-rate Icelandic Airlines.) Ireland, Spain, Portugal and Greece are cheap countries if you want to stay in one place.

You can do well in the South Pacific: Fiji, Western Samoa, the Tonga Islands. But the air fares might eat you up.

Madeira and the Spanish Canaries are cheap, warm islands. Say $200 to $300 a month for a couple. But can you take an island for a year? One reason islands are cheap is there isn't anything to spend money on.

"Some warm island where we could spend just two months..."

Tahiti is just right for that. Just long enough, not too long. There's nothing like a South Pacific morning. Cool weather, under a thatch roof dining area. Hot croissants (baked by Chinese and better than Paris) and butter flown in from Normandy. "Butter should have an aftertaste of chestnuts," the French say.

They tell me you can rent a beach house for $150 a month. I wouldn't bet on help—Tahitians are not hard workers. A few bottles of Hinano beer on Saturday night is enough.

If the island drags, you are trip and overnight on the lovely island of Moorea. (Last time the captain was dunked Bora or Rangiroa. Raiatea and Manihiki. All pleasant islands, some with modest hotels. A luxury one at Bora Bora.

There are several Class A hotels here where you can sit and hear the local gossip over Martinique, rum punch. One excellent drug store with everything you want. The boat year.
