Assignment TV

By TERRENCE O'FLAHERTY

It was reassuring to spend an hour with Noel Coward this week on television. At 70 years of age some of his elegant leanness has gone, but he still dispenses his wit with the graceful benevolence of a bishop blessing the poor.

To the Depression generation in America, he and his plays and music epitomized The Stylish Life more than anything else around. No one we knew was living that way but it was comforting to think that someone was. The theater today could use another like him.

He has often chosen to dismiss himself as "that rather splendid old Chinese character actress," but under David Frost's questioning on his London interview, seen in the U.S. on the stations of the Group W Network, Coward rounded out his opinion of himself with the civilized good humor which has marked everything he has ever done.

"I SPOKE to a friend of yours yesterday and he told me, 'I always go to Noel with my emotional problems and he quickly sorts them out—but he's absolutely frightful with his own.' Is that true?" asked Frost.

"Oh my, he must have been a VERY close friend . . ."

"You're so sophisticated that I cannot imagine you ever crying."

"Nonsense. I cry myself to sleep every night."

"But underneath everything aren't you a man of granite?"

"Not in the least. I'm a chocolate milk sundae . . . With just a little bit of vodka at the bottom."

"Can you describe that thing called 'star quality'?"

"No, except to say that stars have it and non-stars don't."

At what age did you know you had it?"

"Two."

"WHAT WAS the best scene in your early life?"

"At kindergarten school kept by rather an angry lady called Miss Willington who questioned my use of English. I left immediately and when she unwisely tried to drag me back, I bit her through to the bone. I can taste that taffeta blouse still."

"During the war didn't Roosevelt and Churchill argue about the lyrics of your song, 'Mac Dogs and Englishmen Go Out In The Noonday Sun'?"

"Yes, and I had to say to him, 'Well, Sir Winston, you were wrong.' He paused a moment, blinked, and said, 'England can take it.' Every generation spews up one remarkable character. Churchill was ours. Englishmen still go out in the noonday sun. Mac dogs have learned better."

"Do you ever wish you had been a critic?"

"Good God no! And I would also wish that nobody else had been."

"DO YOU believe in God?"

"We've never been intimate but maybe we have a few things in common. That shall have to wait until a later date."

"What is your idea of Heaven?"

"Tonight at 8:30."

"And do you have any ideas of Hell?"

"Oh yes—and they've all to do with overacting."

"How would you like to be remembered?"

"I think—as a man who has brought pleasure to people . . . a good friend and rather amusing character."

Most certainly he will have his wish.

Comedy Run Ends This Weekend
