When a community is stricken by disaster—floods, tornado, hurricane, or war—communication is most important, and ready to provide that vital link are a group of concerned citizens who are members of the American Radio Relay League, Inc., sponsoring Amateur Radio Week, June 22-28. Since 1940, members of the League have worked with Red Cross and other agencies during national calamities. Their prime responsibility has been relaying urgent messages.

During the Alaska flood in 1967, "ham" operators in Los Angeles helped local Red Cross workers provide health and welfare reports to concerned families here with relatives in the flooded area.
