Assignment TV By TERRENCE O'FLAHERTY

Motherhood and a career are compatible after all. All you do is shake them up in a bottle.

At least that was Barbara Eden's formula as the 2,500-year-old genie who escaped from her magic bottle on the first episode of "I Dream of Jeannie" and will continue to do so for another year at least.

The last time I saw Miss Eden (out of her bottle) she was planning to become a mother — any minute it looked like to me. But I may have been wrong about the time table because impending motherhood makes a bachelor very nervous.

And if you think I was nervous, you should have seen her producer. He didn't discover her condition until two days after she had signed the contract and of that point his own dream of Jeannie seemed to include a 'cap into the sea after willing all his worldly goods to the Malibu Beach Chapter of The Planned Parenthood Association.

NOW, FOUR years later, Miss Eden has another announcement is the last after four seasons," she sald. "That means I'll be visible to more than just the two men. I don't understand these things but the writers think it will open up greater story possibilities if more people can see me."

Anyone who has seen Miss Eden in person will quickly understand about these things because she is, outside her bottle, quite a dish. Last season her nature. They couldn't decide how much, if any, of the young lady's umbilicus to reveal. NBC even refused to allow it to be didn't have a navel or that it was hideously deformed, Estable value and the producers of the producer

NOW, FOUR years later, Miss Eden has another announcement: she's going to get married. On the show, that is, (off-stage she is the wife of the world's most famous TV Indian. Michael Ansara, who played Cochise in "Broken Arrow," one of the few instances where the of the few instances where the Red Man was portrayed without dust in his mouth.)

"T'm finally getting the astrood of innocence.

When I asked her to comment
