A Letter To My Son

By Tom Rische

Dear Bruce.

People may disagree on the relative merits of reading, writing, arithmetic, football, driver training, or sex education, but nearly all agree that their schools ought to be "cheap."

That's always a sure-fire platform for Board of Education candidates, partly because school finance is one of the few areas in which people are allowed to vote on their taxes. We scream about income taxes, sales taxes, and other levies, but all we really can do is scream.

Costs of education are increasing. There's 10 times as much to teach about as there was only 35 years ago. Teaching youngsters to operate the complex machinery that makes our society go is far more expensive than teaching him from a single text book. Getting qualified teachers to teach these classes costs more, too

Too many people think of school in terms of the "good old days" when schools consisted of reading, writing, arithmetic, and maybe Latin. They were taught by little old maids, but only half of the eligible kids ever made it to high school, a condition still true in many parts of the world.

The American educational system, with all its faults, have been one of the big reasons why America has such power and a high living standard. Worldwide, countries with highest educational rates have top living standards.

The higher the education a man has, the more money he makes, the more taxes he pays, the more goods he buys, and the less likely he is to be on welfare or carried away by the ravings of extremists. That's good not only for the individual, but society.

Cutting corners in education is cutting corners on the future. Yours for the future,

'Involved' Churches Proposed

The church must become involved in the political process if it hopes to speak on behalf of "the powerless, oppressed, and disadvantaged," an executive of the United Church of Christ

The speaker, Dr. Lewis I. Maddocks, New York, execu-tive director of the United Church Council for Christian Social Action, said the church must also act corporately be cause decisions are made through organizations.

Dr. Maddocks addressed the Dr. Maddocks addressed the annual meeting of the denomi-nation's Southern California Conference at the Claremont United Church of Christ, 233 W. Fifth St. The conference is made up of 50,000 members in 165 churches.

"The tragedy is not that the church is speaking when it should not," he said, "but that it is failing to speak when it should.

"The active role the churches are playing in the civil rights struggle today is largely a result of the guilt they feel for their silence on this issue in the past," he continued. "It is the apathy of most Americans to poverty and injustice which should be deplored.

"In fact, a statement which is the product of compassion and indignation over an in justice should never be con demned," he said. "Even if i results from ignorance, it is better than the apathy which results in indifference and cal-lousness about the needs of
