Council

Foley also noted that the building would be soundproofed and that the walls would separate the establishment from adjacent residences.

William F. Hunter, 17122 Spinning Ave., submitted a petition bearing 240 signatures in support of the liquor permit.

Opposition to the liquor permit was spearheaded by Bill Gaugh, 18206 Taylor Court, who objected that on-site liquor sales would cause neighborhood noise, present a hazard, and make the restaurant incompatible with the neighborhood.

Another opponent, Mrs. Kay Arriaga, 18316 Fairview Ave., stated that area residents had fought for six years to keep the neighborhood residential.

Mayor Albert Isen reminded opponents that there was no zone change involved in the hearing, noting that Gianni had a legal right to build his restaurant on the C-2 site without special permission. He asked opponents to confine their objections to the question of the conditional use permit for the sale of liquor.

A parade of local residents stepped up to the microphone to air their collective opposition to the permit. They argued that a liquor license would probably keep the restaurant open until 2 a.m., with patrons slamming car doors just a few feet from bedroom windows. Fears were also expressed that the restaurant may become a banquet hall with large groups staying until late at night.

It was further brought out that there are many children in the neighborhood. Evening activities for both children and adults are commonplace at several local churches. Residents fear that the restaurant may generate drunk drivers in the area.

Mayor Isen warned opponents that the luxury restaurant would probably be a far more compatible use than many other legal uses Gianni could envision for his property. Isen said Gianni would be perfectly free to build a liquor store, a malt shop, a spaghetti parlor, or any number of other types of establishments which could present a police problem.

Furthermore, Isen stated, he wouldn't want to see the issue "tested in court."

Councilman Ken Miller told opponents that the city could revoke the liquor permit if it resulted in obnoxious neighborhood conditions.

Sole vote against granting the conditional use permit was cast by Councilman Donald E. Wilson.
